NASH HERNANDEZ, SR., AND THE NASH HERNANDEZ ORCHESTRA

The late Nash Hernandez, Sr. was the founder and leader of the Nash Hernandez Orchestra, Austin's longest running Big Band. The street selected to be named after "Mr. Nash," as he was fondly known by many of the local musicians, runs along Town Lake's hike and bike trail, just east of IH 35. It is located just around the block from the house on Holly Street in which he lived with his wife, Minnie, and their five children for over 45 years, a home that is still owned and occupied by a member of the Hernandez Family.

Nash Hernandez, Sr., who was born in New Braunfels and raised in Fredericksburg, fell in love with the Big Band style while in the Army Air Corp during World War II, where he rubbed shoulders with the big band greats of the time who were also serving their country. In 1945, after completing his stint with the military, he made Austin his home with the late Minnie Salinas, an Austin native, whom he had married in 1944. Although a dry cleaner by trade, he pursued his musical interest by quickly joining the local Austin music scene, starting his own big band orchestra in 1949.

The original twelve-piece band was initially composed of all Hispanic musicians who "Mr. Nash" himself taught. Many of these musicians such as Tim Torres, Dave and Abel Gutierrez, and Ruben Sanchez eventually went on to lead their own bands. Other musicians who performed in the orchestra in later years and went on to lead their own bands or become prominent musicians in the Austin jazz scene, include Mitch Watkins, Steve Zirkel, Martin Banks, Paul Ostermayer, Tomas Ramirez, John Mills, Mike Mordecai, and Clifford Zirkel, who inspired by "Mr. Nash", began his own big band. Since then the band has had many musicians come through the ranks, but the sound has always remained the same.

The success and staying power of both Nash Hernandez, Sr. (a trumpeter), and of his Orchestra, was a result of its diverse musical style. The orchestra played a mix of Big Band and Latino music, which has been followed by generations of fans throughout Central Texas. The band did all the popular Big Band swing of the 40s era, Glen Miller, Tommy Dorsey, and Benny Goodman. In addition, the band also performed the Latin music of Perez Prado, Tito Puente, and Xavier Cugat making the orchestra popular with a wide variety of people and served as a community unifier in that the music reached across all ethnic and cultural lines and barriers, bringing people together to hear the sounds of the big band greats of both the Hispanic and Anglo communities.

Nash Hernandez and his orchestra played at such events as the Laguna Gloria Art Museum Festivals (now the Austin Museum of Art), Aqua Fest, and also for the Austin Senators' Baseball Team during the Pan American games, for corporate parties, inaugural balls, and many of Austin's debutante balls of the fifties, sixties, and seventies, and for generations of weddings and anniversary celebrations. Recognizing that his name and music reached all peoples of Central Texas, his orchestra was frequently the choice of many of Austin's well-known politicians.

But "Mr. Nash" always gave generously of himself directly to the community by playing countless fundraisers for churches and other charitable organizations, e.g., Austin area senior citizen centers, Umlauf Sculpture Gardens, and St. David's Rehab Center, to name just a few. He also served briefly as the volunteer choir director for the church where he and his wife were married, Our Lady of Guadalupe Church, in East Austin.

However, and even more important to "Mr. Nash," was his belief that music could help keep young people off the streets. Therefore, early in his career he began giving private music lessons to neighborhood kids, charging only nominal fees. (To continue this dream, the Nash Hernandez Orchestra Foundation was created after his death to provide music scholarships to underprivileged children.) In addition, "Mr. Nash" invited all with a love of music to play in his orchestra, often ignoring social norms of the time that would have precluded inviting some to play in his band. At any one time his orchestra could be composed of a combination of Hispanics, Anglos, African-Americans, and women (wearing either black tuxedos along with their male counterparts, or long black dresses). Frequently, these musicians were from other countries, e.g., Russia, Wales, Hungary, and Cuba. Many were UT students; often they were professionals, such as lawyers, teachers, nurses, business owners, and bankers. But they all had one thing in common – a love of music.

In 1975, Governor Dolph Briscoe named Nash Hernandez, Sr. Ambassador of Goodwill for the State of Texas. He was also recognized for his musical contributions by the City of Austin in 1975 and then again in 1993, as well as by the Texas Senate in 1994. In the spring of 1994, Vice-President Al Gore recognized him for both his musical and community contributions. "Mr. Nash" passed away June 26, 1994, but not before making a deathbed request specifically asking his youngest son, Ruben G. Hernandez, a drummer and UT graduate, who began playing with the orchestra at age 11, to continue his big band. Today the Nash Hernandez Orchestra continues to perform, keeping his musical legacy alive. In recognition of his musical contributions, Nash Hernandez, Sr. was posthumously inducted into the Austin Music Hall of Fame in 1999.
